When the clinical presentation is typical, the diagnosis is made. When the clinical presentation is atypical, the presence of abdominal pain and tenderness mainly in the upper abdomen, the diagnosis of acute pancreatitis is made. The following features are considered diagnostic of acute pancreatitis: characteristic upper abdominal pain, elevated levels of pancreatic enzymes in the blood and urine, and local findings associated with pancreatic disease due to local findings associated with pancreatic diseases are confirmed by diagnostic imaging. According to the diagnostic criteria of acute pancreatitis in Japan, patients who meet two or more of the following three criteria are diagnosed as having acute pancreatitis: characteristic upper abdominal pain, elevated levels of pancreatic enzymes, and findings of elevated levels of pancreatic enzymes in the blood and urine. This article is based on the results first reported in the JP Guidelines for the treatment of acute pancreatitis (JP Guidelines 2010 in Japanese).
